

Cyber Bullying: What To Do If Your Child Might Be a Victim
Reference: ParentFurther - a search institute resource for families

- Know the latest young adult trends used with technology.
- Try to understand what is going on.
- Try not to immediately ban access.
- Encourage your child to deal with the emotions through whatever creative activity he is interested in.
- Remain open to the idea they may want to talk about the problem.
- Replace negative with positive: keep her involved in family, community, and other group activities.
- Join forces with other adults.
- Empower your teen by keeping him involved and listening to his opinions about how to resolve the problem.
- Don't hesitate to make difficult decisions.

